What exactly is a Green Job?

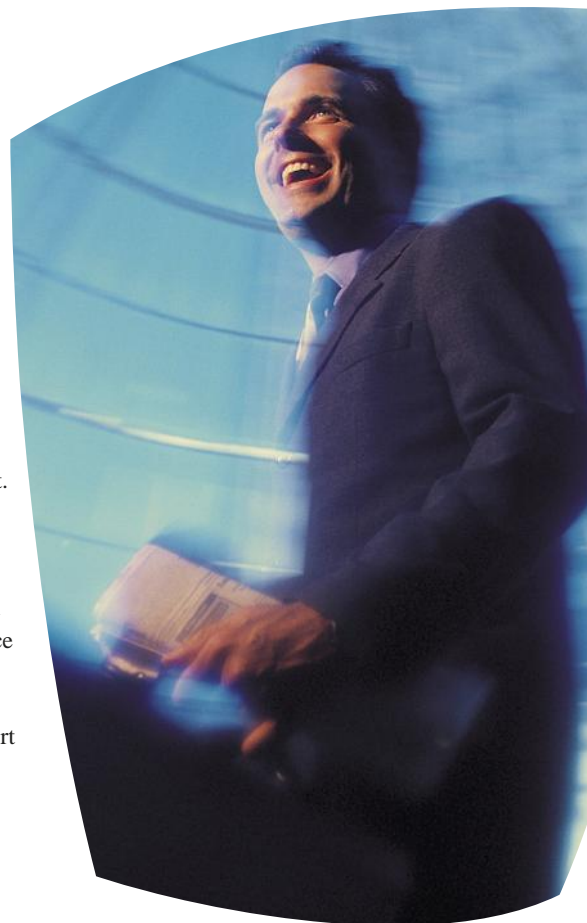

We are asked all the time, what exactly is a green job? Well, there is currently no uniformed definition of a green job used by federal or state governments or public or private companies. So, we have the opportunity to define the term “green job.” Jobs developing, supporting, or maintaining, solar power (harnessing energy from the sun), wind power (harnessing energy from the wind), and hydroelectricity (harnessing power from water) are clearly considered green. Nuclear power, clean coal technology, and magnetic power are also traditionally considered “green.”

In response to consumer demand, public and private companies are now implementing sustainability programs designed to lower costs through efficiencies, while utilizing environmentally friendly chemicals or products, which has the ultimate effect of decreasing the company’s carbon footprint.

So, let’s define a green job. A green job has a direct or indirect positive impact on the environment, through the development of new green technologies, the maintenance of current green technologies, and the manufacturing of green products. A position principally dedicated to the support or management of green programs, along with environmentally neutral positions are green.

That’s how we define green. Let us know what you think.

Building the Puregreenjobs.com team

Puregreenjobs.com is excited to announce the opening of our Washington, DC and Denver, CO offices. Both offices are staffed with professional recruiters who are enthusiastic, dedicated, highly qualified, and ready to link green job seekers with green employers. Please join me in welcoming Nicolee Ambrose (Washington, DC) and Jenna Melliadis (Denver, CO) to the Puregreenjobs.com team!

The Recruiters Corner

The best resource. The right time.

Timing is everything, and with the national push to solve the global energy crisis, now is the time to consider a career in sustainable business practices. The government promises to create millions of “green jobs” over the next decade, providing us with an opportunity to solve not only our economic crisis, but our environmental crises in the process!

Puregreenjobs.com is poised to partner with new and current sustainable businesses on a local and national basis. Our goal is to connect both active and passive job seekers with new opportunities in the sustainable marketplace. Our online job board provides job seekers with a targeted platform to connect with “green employers” at no cost to you. With the ability to upload up to three resumes, create personalized job searches with e-mail notifications, and our free interview tips, our job board is sure to assist you with your next “green job” search. We will also keep you up to date on the latest green industry news and contact you when your qualifications meet the requirements of our executive searches. We look forward to working with you in the future.

The best is yet to come...

We are always improving our site and over the next few months we will add more functionality and services.

On May 8, 2009, Puregreenjobs.com opened its virtual doors. Since then, our system has undergone several major upgrades. But, we are far from finished.

Over the next few months we will be adding to the job seeker page a comprehensive resume building process, tips on writing cover and thank you letters, and a series of some of the most commonly asked interview questions. We will also be adding information on green industries, associations, and university programs.

Although all this information is free to Puregreenjobs.com members, we have been asked to provide more services to job seekers. To meet the demands of our customers, we are evaluating how we can provide everything from resume writing services to professional job search services.

Perhaps the most exciting change that is currently being designed is the addition of the PureGreenReport. Our goal is to be the leader in green news and talk. We will expand our search for green news articles and information on green companies. The PureGreenReport will also feature the PureGreen Blog, where we will open the forum for your ideas, questions, and thoughts.

As you can tell, this is an exciting year for the Puregreenjobs.com team. If you ever have any questions, please send an email to: questions@puregreenjobs.com. Good luck on your job search and please let us know if we can be of greater service to you.
